FACT PANEL

Zaynab bint Ali

- Who she was. Daughter of Imam Ali and Sayyida Fatima, sister to Imam Hasan and Imam Husayn, present at Karbala and throughout the captivity that followed.
- What she did afterward. Spoke publicly, in Kufa and in Damascus, in front of the rulers responsible for what had happened at Karbala.
- Why that mattered. As a captive with no protection, speaking at all carried real risk — and her account of events became part of how the story was preserved and retold.
- What is not claimed here. The exact content of what she said is not quoted in this letter — that belongs to a citation-checked edition, not a paraphrase.
- Why she is in this envelope. Zaynab survived Karbala, and made sure the world could not simply forget what it had seen there.

She lived on after the captivity, continuing to be a central figure in how Karbala was remembered.

The Woman Who Would Not Stay Silent

● is the grown-up · ○ is you · ●○ is together

- After Karbala, the people who survived were marched, as captives, first to Kufa and then on to Damascus, through crowds who had come out specifically to see them pass.

○ Who was among the captives?

- Zaynab, Imam Husayn's sister, was among them — grieving everything that had just happened to her family, and now walking in chains through cities that had gathered to watch her do it.

○ Did she stay quiet through all of that?

- She did not, in either city. In front of the rulers who had ordered what happened, and the crowds who had come only to see the aftermath of it, she stood and spoke.

○ Wasn't that dangerous, speaking like that as a captive?

- Extremely dangerous. She had no protection at all in that moment, no army behind her, nothing but her own refusal to let the story be told only by the people who had won that day.

○ What did she actually say to them?

THE WOMAN WHO WOULD NOT STAY SILENT · CONTINUED

- She named plainly what had happened, in front of the very people responsible for it, in a voice that did not shake the way everyone watching had expected it to.

- Did speaking out change anything right away?

- Not right away, no. But the story did not disappear the way silence would have let it quietly disappear — and it has been told, ever since, largely because she made sure it could not simply be buried.

- Could you speak against the person who hurt you most? Say it, out loud.

- Most people would need a great deal to even consider it. Zaynab had almost nothing left to lose that day, and she used exactly that.

IN OUR WORDS

If you try to get something by disobeying God, you will not get it — and you will end up with what you were afraid of.
