The Praise He Made Specific. Imam al-Sadiq said his mother was among the believing women — and named her specifically, rather than praising mothers in general. Five items, no event print, dateless.

One style for the whole line — Fraunces and Nunito Sans, cut paper, the person on a stamp. Still open where it shows: the fact panel is TO VERIFY and the return address is not set.

Umm Farwa

- Who she was. Mother of Imam al-Sadiq, from a family with its own line of learning and standing.
- What is remembered. Imam al-Sadiq named her specifically among a small group of women he described in terms of faith and character.
- What that shows. A precise, considered assessment rather than a generic tribute — the kind of praise that has to be earned rather than simply offered.
- Her household. Known for learning within her own family line, carried into how she raised her son.
- Why she is in this envelope. Imam al-Sadiq said his mother was among the believing women — and named her specifically, rather than praising mothers in general.

She lived to see her son become one of the most widely followed teachers of his generation.

The Praise He Made Specific

• is the grown-up • ◦ is you • •◦ is together

- People praise their mothers all the time, in the ordinary way that could be said about anybody's mother. Imam al-Sadiq did not do that when he spoke about his.

◦ What did he say?

- He named her. Out loud, to the students who wrote down almost everything he said, he put his own mother on a short list of women he described for their faith and their character — not for her cooking, and not for putting up with him.

◦ Is that different?

- Completely. Anyone can say a kind thing about their mother. Almost nobody says a precise one, and a precise one has to be earned before it can be said.

◦ Who was she?

- Umm Farwa. Her father was one of the best-known scholars in Medina, so she grew up in a house where people argued about serious things at the table and the children were expected to follow it. She married into a second house exactly like that one, and then ran it.

THE PRAISE HE MADE SPECIFIC · CONTINUED

○ Did she teach him?

• She was the first house he ever lived in. Whatever a household teaches without meaning to — how to listen, when to speak, what counts as an answer and what doesn't — she was the one running it.

○ What did he become?

• The teacher more of this whole box runs back through than any other. Students came to Medina from everywhere to sit with him, and the ones who went on to teach are still known by name, one at a time. That began in her house, at her table.

○ Did he know then?

• Nobody knows at the time. He said it years later, when he was old enough for his words to carry, and by then she had been doing it his whole life.

○ Say one exact thing about someone here. Out loud, now.

• General praise costs nothing, which is why everybody gives it. A specific one means somebody was paying attention when they did not have to be.

●○

He did not call her a good mother. He said exactly which good.
