The Second Mother. Umm al-Banin raised another woman's children as her own, and years later, at Karbala, lost four sons who had grown up doing exactly that. Five items, no event print, dateless.

One style for the whole line — Fraunces and Nunito Sans, cut paper, the person on a stamp. Still open where it shows: the fact panel is TO VERIFY and the return address is not set.

Umm al-Banin

- Who she was. Imam Ali's wife after Sayyida Fatima's death, and mother of four sons, including Abbas ibn Ali.
- What she is remembered for. Raising Imam Hasan, Imam Husayn, and their sisters alongside her own children, without distinction, in the years after their mother's death.
- What happened at Karbala. Four of her sons — Abbas among them — were killed there, fighting for the same family she had helped raise from childhood.
- How she is remembered afterward. Accounts describe her grief as inseparable from her pride in what her sons had done — mourning them without ever expressing regret for how she had raised them.
- Why she is in this envelope. Umm al-Banin raised another woman's children as her own, and years later, at Karbala, lost four sons who had grown up doing exactly that.

She lived on in Medina after Karbala, and is remembered for mourning Imam Husayn alongside her own sons for the rest of her life.

The Second Mother

● is the grown-up · ○ is you · ●○ is together

- After Sayyida Fatima died, Imam Ali married again. Her name was Umm al-Banin, and she walked into a house with somebody else's grieving children already in it.

○ Whose children?

- Hasan and Husayn, and their sisters. Their mother had just died. Umm al-Banin was the new wife, which is the hardest job in that house and the easiest one to do badly.

○ Did she do it badly?

- She did the opposite. Every account of her says the same thing: those children were never once made to feel like the previous family. She raised them before she had any of her own.

○ What was her name?

- Fatima. The very same name as the mother those children had just buried. Traditionally told: she asked the household to stop using it — she did not want Hasan and Husayn hearing their own mother's name called across the house every day of their lives. She went by Umm al-Banin instead, which only means mother of the sons.

○ She gave up her name?

- For their sake, and before they were even hers to worry about. It is the smallest thing in this letter and it may be the biggest.

○ Did she have her own?

- Four sons, later. The eldest was Abbas.

○ What happened to them?

- All four were at Karbala with Husayn. All four were killed there — the boys she had raised alongside him, dying for the brother they were brought up beside.

○ Did she blame anyone?

- She could have. She had every reason and nobody would have argued with her. What the accounts remember instead is that she never once said she wished she had raised them differently.

○ Would you take on someone else's family? Say honestly.

- It is asked of more people than admit it — a stepmother, an aunt, an older cousin, somebody's second wife. She is the one this box holds up, and she is held up for the raising, not for the losing.
